

BME EDGE SPEAKERS SERIES

Ms. Kerri Burchill

Great teachers are made, not born: Effective teaching skills

Here at Hopkins, many of us pursue our careers in academia: where teaching is indispensable. However, it is not easy to teach effectively with limited or no pedagogical training in education instruction. BME EDGE will host a special session for exploring what constitutes effective teaching in higher education, complemented by a self-exploration of which effective practices attendees currently employ in their own teaching. Ms. Kerri Burchill has over 20 years of experience in adult learning and secondary education and is currently serving as adjunct faculty at JHU. She will review her research regarding typical experiences of new professors, the challenges they face, and the strategies they can implement to overcome the challenges emerging professors face in higher education.

Wednesday, June 17th
Clark Hall 110
12 noon - 1 pm

Refreshments provided!

RSVP at www.edge.bme.jhu.edu